Lung artery wall thickness (WTh) is associated with risk of heart failure. However, few studies have examined the predictive value of vessel wall thickening for heart failure. The aim of this study was to investigate whether WTh predicts incident heart failure in a general population. We included 2945 individuals without baseline cardiovascular disease or lung disease in the Tromso Study, and followed them for a median of 7.6 years (25th, 75th percentiles: 4.8, 8.2 years). WTh was measured by carotid ultrasonography and divided into four quartiles. The primary outcome was incident heart failure as defined by the Framingham algorithm. The hazard ratio (HR) for heart failure in the highest quartile compared with the lowest was 1.79 [95% confidence interval (95% CI): 1.24, 2.60] (p for trend = 0.007). The results were similar when we included only non-smokers in the analysis. The association was attenuated (HR: 1.39; 95% CI: 0.92, 2.08; p for trend = 0.07) after adjusting for traditional heart failure risk factors. In addition, the HR for heart failure increased for the third and fourth quartiles compared to the first quartile of WTh in individuals with high frequency of tobacco smoking (HR: 3.
